Tool: Feedback Methodology

In order to equip business leaders with holistic skills and collect qualitative high inputs from learners/peers, it is crucial to cultivate a culture of feedback.

Below is a short overview about some key rules when working with feedback.

There are numerous sources on the internet about different feedback techniques. Do some research on the internet and find a tool which fits best your situation. Experiment with this tool when engaging with your learners, whether it's during team projects, class activities, or at the end of a course. Repeated practice will enhance student’s familiarity and improve the quality of inputs. Keep in mind that there’s no definitive right or wrong approach in this process.
